Companion planting can attract beneficial insects, those that prey on the bad bugs. Let herbs, like parsley, dill, and cilantro, go to flower and the beneficial insects will have a place to land and feed,—and the encouragement they need to stick around.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE:

I'd like to thank everyone for stepping up and keeping things going while I was gone to Laughlin. We arrived in Bakersfield late afternoon to sunshine and the fragrant aroma of orange blossoms. (The RV Park seats in the middle of a huge orange grove). It was on to Laughlin the next morning with more sunshine, which remained with us except one day of rain. The Bougainvillea, Lantana and Hibiscus were in full bloom and I enjoyed the daily 2 mile walks along the waterfront of the Colorado River. Journeying home, barely two weeks later, found the hills of the Tehachapi Pass ablaze with yellow and gold roadside wildflowers, some growing right through the asphalt. All the green trees and foliage on the hillsides from Santa Rosa to Lake Mendocino were a welcome site. 'Tis good to be home!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Love, Jo J

My Favorite Native

..... by Jerry Shaul

Josephine, did you know that you have 65 lilacs in full bloom in your yard? Don't get excited these are not the exotics that you have forbidden because in the past when they bloomed we always sold our home. These are genus ceanothus which are confined to North America with forty-three species native to California. No, I don't know how many species we have but they range in size from a creeping or low mounding habit to tree proportions with most being medium-sized shrubs. Many species in our yard are not indigenous to Lake County. The deer dearly enjoy the "outsiders" but never touch the "locals. With few exceptions these plants are evergreen with leaves that vary in size from one to three inches. The blossoms vary with each species. They may be short dense clusters, rounded and stalkless while others have large compound spikes of feathery beauty not unlike the exotic lilac. Flower color ranges through many shades of blue to blue-purple, white and rare pinkage shades. Some of the most beautiful species occur along the central coastal ranges. Although seedlings occur in our yard and are easily transplanted, between November and March, I find that the "outsiders" can be propagated successfully from cuttings taken after the blooming season. There would seem to be California wild lilac for every possible situation except a shady well watered city garden.

Josephine would you like to enhance a glass of wine with a stroll through the honey-like fragrance of our California wild lilacs?
